A Christmas Story by T. B. Aldrich.

CHIMES OF MEMORY.

Merry Christmas! Ah! but it used to be. It used to be, before the dreamy mood of boyhood melted away like a silvery mist. Merry, merry Christmas, then! The very words tinkled musically. I can hear them trembling yet, in memory, like that faint jingling of sleigh hells which steals up from street and in through the snow-muffled case-

It was fine, then, to laiter in the crowded streets, gazing in the shop windows—the El Doradoes of "fancy articles," the Austrian lands of hon-bons and rock-candy! What stereotyped visions I had of kind St. Nick, with his reindeer uipage on the house top, and his huge pack filled with trumpets that wouldn't blow well, and carts that wouldn't go well, and dear old Haus Christian Anderson's story-books, which never failed of being Arcades of delight. Then at home, when the apples and nuts were disposfor our instruments.

Touched with these memories, and sitting once more, as it were, in the happy smr-rise of life, I am moved to write a Christmas story for lda Maye, and little Carrie, and tiny-fingered Mabel, who are sleeping in the next room. I will put it in the most diminutive of the three mimic stockings it is all the poor artist can give to the dreamy nugels! And some of these days, when this weary pen is quite tired ont, when there is nothing left of me but two or three their mother, some Christmas eve, mayhap, will

SUNDAY......FEB. 1, 1857.

If We present our readers this morning with the first Sunday issue of the Democrat. We have stated our reasons for this change heretofore. We are satisfied, from the many kind expressions of our friends, and from the many additional subscriptions already received, commencing with the issue of to-day, that the change is most acceptable to the community.

The paper will be delivered promptly to all portions of the city at an early hour by faithful and efficient carriers. All orders for subscriptions, left at the clerk's desk during the week, will meet with strict attention.

We have said before, that this city is too political. Politics are a good thing in their place, but our city can't save the Union; and our city has interests outside of politics, that are far commerce, are the first objects of a city, and should never be postponed for mere political questions. ### [Correspondence of the Louisville Democrat.] LETTER FROM INDIANAPOLIS. INDIANAPOLIS, Jan. 31, 1857.

Messrs. Epirons: The adjourned Democratic HARNEY, HUGHES & CO., caucus, for the nomination of State officers last evening, was further postponed until next Thursday evening.
